6 episodes x 54 minutes (#2-7)

Michiko Daimon is a freelance doctor. She was dispatched to a university hospital that lost a number of doctors all at once because of harsh work conditions.

When Michiko arrives at the hospital dressed like a fashion model, the other doctors cannot hide their surprise. But more than her appearance, it is what she does in the hospital that creates a major stir.

Shortly after arrival, Michiko criticizes the surgical techniques of the hospital director that is scheduled to perform an operation. She is harsh and points out things most doctors would easily notice. But no one is willing to confront their superiors because of the deep-rooted hierarchical structure of the hospital. As a result, she is forced to do menial jobs because she upset the hospital director. And just as she feared, something terrible happens during the director's surgical procedure.

Medical care and money. Medical hierarchies and connections. This drama is about one freelance doctor's struggles to navigate these ties that cannot be separated.
