

Whether the studio guests get to watch fantastic stage performances or not depend solely on their five senses!

Are those fantastic performers on the stage for real? Or everything is a fraud? Can the guests detect the MC's fraud?

A game show where the guests are sitting turning their back to the show and play truth or false to guess if there is a real performance going on the show or not.

Performing artists with super-human abilities are invited to the studio to present their skills. But the performer is not always really there. The MC always talks as if the performer was there and the guests, with their backs to the MC and the audience, try to spot whether the MC is telling the truth or a lie by feeling the air in the back and checking the audiences' responds. Only guests who succeed in spotting the truth are allowed to see the performance.

The guests who guess wrong and turn their heads around, thinking there actually are performers on the stage while there is none, get a penalty of having a cream pie thrown to their faces.

One show consists of 5 rounds of guessing, and so the guests with a pie thrown to their faces end up participating with their faces all smeared with cream...

The awesome performances themselves are worth watching, and the game adds extra fun and excitement to the show.
